

A GREAT LEARNING COMMUNITY

Learning helps us become better and live better, healthier lives. In this process, our neurons connect and create pathways in the brain. Learning through experiences is very valuable, especially when we share them with loved ones who enrich our lives.

The G50 is a learning community for leaders in Iberoamerica. Mari Carmen and I have had the opportunity to participate in its annual events since 2002. Most meetings have been held in Washington DC, but there have also been programs in Silicon Valley, Cambridge, New York, Santiago de Chile, Havana, Madrid, Berlin, Beijing, Shanghai, Singapore, and Jerusalem.

This great initiative was founded by Moisés Naím, a prominent leader and expert in international politics and economics. He was the Editor-in-Chief of the Foreign Policy magazine and has written several acclaimed books on global economy and politics. Moisés is a member of the Carnegie Foundation for International Peace and is the producer and host of the program "Efecto Naím." Due to his outstanding work, he has received significant awards. His career includes relevant positions in global institutions such as the World Bank.

Mari Carmen and I have made lifelong friends in this community. Additionally, I have enjoyed seeing how the next generations participate in these spaces and contribute their vision and talent. Even when facing enormous challenges, life is a wonderful adventure, and having the opportunity to learn every day makes it very interesting.
